

Glenn St. Charles Eulogy

by Billy Ellis - November 1, 2010

The arrow is broken and so are our hearts. Our beloved founder, leader and friend, Glenn St. Charles has taken the last trail.

The old order is passing. Swiftly receding into memory are the days of strong, earnest men who followed an atavistic yearning to pit their skills against wild animals. In those bygone days to be designated "hunter" was the highest honor that could be bestowed upon a person while today sport hunting is under constant pressure from quixotic malcontents.

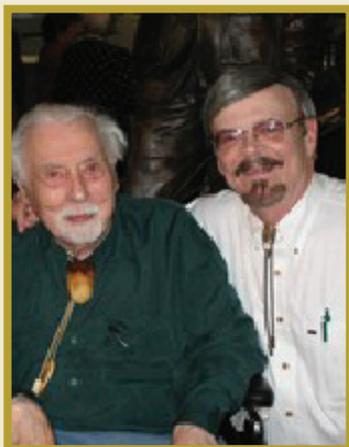

Some of us have been lucky enough to briefly glimpse or share a camp fire with those living anachronisms in buckskin coats with hand made bows and gale-burned faces. Glenn St. Charles was definitely one of them.

Glenn loved to speak of by-gone days, some halcyon, some filled with struggle with the elements, but all suffused with the joy and wonder of the wilderness. Through Glenn's tales you could wander on journeys through raw and lonely lands on man's greatest quest; hunting the beautiful, cunning, and sometimes dangerous big game animals of North America with a bow and arrow.

To Glenn St. Charles, traditional archery and traditional values were one and the same. His life spanned the better part of this century, but he comes from a time far away. A time when a man's word was his bond; when the quality of the finished product was more important than the wage earned; when the success of a hunting trip was measured more in warm companionship than game brought to bag.

When a kinder, gentler spirit pervaded America, God created Glenn St. Charles.

There have never been many "legends" in bowhunting history. Many aspire but few are chosen. A person becomes a legend when the strength of his character causes a whole movement to become better and stronger until it rises to a higher philosophical plain. Glenn St. Charles did that for his beloved sport of bowhunting. In this century our "legends" have been Ishi, Compton, Pope & Young, Bear and St. Charles.

Imagine now that you can hear the words of Glenn St. Charles; listen to the thunder in the mountains, the click of the caribou's hoof as the wind sweeps the barren grounds and hear the grizzly bear's roar.

Glenn St. Charles spoke to our hearts of those things and he will never be forgotten in the hearts of those who loved him.
